SRC HISTORY

Just a few minutes from downtown Vancouver, Southlands Riding Club has grown up with the city. Southlands Riding Club (SRC) traces its roots back to a time when the land was covered in farmland, horse stables, and a sense of community. Long before its official establishment in 1943, the Blenheim Flats were tended by farming families like the McCleery brothers, Samuel and Fitzgerald, and Hugh Magee. The landscape along the Fraser River, stretching from 75th/Granville to the river's mouth, was characterized by pastoral lands and agricultural pursuits. This idyllic setting was also home to riding stables and academies, creating a vibrant equestrian culture in the region.

In the 1920s, the Point Grey Golf Course emerged, drawing more farm and horse owners to the Flats. However, the area was not only about golf; it was a haven for horse enthusiasts, with riding academies scattered across Vancouver, including Dunbar, Point Grey, and Stanley Park. The spark that would ignite Southlands Riding Club began in the early 1940s when a group of visionary riders gathered to discuss the formation of a community dedicated to preserving trails and advocating for equestrian safety. In August 1943, Southlands Riding Club was officially incorporated with a modest annual membership fee of $3.

The Club sits on the original property bought in 1946. The clubhouse is the original design with modern amenities added over the years. The Big Ring was the first ring built as an oval arena with parking around the perimeter, it remains in its original location with many changes from drainage, to footing, and to fences over the decades.

Dressage was very strong in the community with dressage masters such as Alois Podhasky, Reiner Klimke, Colonel Carde as regular guests. Dressage in BC would be remiss to also mention long time Southlands resident Dietrich von Hopffgarten who formed many dressage riders and coaches in the area. BC has had many Canadian Equestrian Team riders who originated or competed at SRC such as Gina Smith, Leonie Bramall, Leslie Reid, Bonny Bonnello, Liz McConnell, Nancy McLaughlin and Karen Pavicic.

The Club has continued to evolve, adapting to urban encroachment while maintaining its equestrian essence. The Pacific Riding for the Developing Abilities was founded at SRC and continues to operate programs twice a year. SRC also hosts The Urban Horse Project and in 2016, SRC introduced the Rescue and Rehabilitation Program, embracing a mission to provide care and training for equine residents. Over the years, numerous horses and ponies found new beginnings through the program, transitioning from uncertainty to confident and educated companions. As 'The Club' enters a new decade, its legacy endures while preserving the equestrian community. The Club's commitment to fostering camaraderie, horse welfare, and the joy of riding remains.
